

1011. Dayal, R. and Singh, A. 1973. Harvest tail end water. Farm Journal, XIV(12): 13-15.

The paper suggests that the tail end water, when trained, can be used economically for crop production. It does not involve any extra cost except for providing a channel for diverting water. This water can be lifted whenever necessary from the collection tank.